

What does the well-dressed revolutionary wear?

Sporting the classic bandido we have these handsome chaps. Sombrero, bandoliers a rifle and a couple of revolvers.

Or modelled by some Adelitas, white tops & long skirts or dresses, with the defining bandoliers & sombreros

For the most martially inclined Field uniform is pretty much the same regardless of rank. Plain & shapeless off-white tunic & trousers. Boots or shoes are both possible. Peaked hat, often of the same material as the uniform.

The higher classes may prefer Dress uniform modelled by a young Porfirio Diaz in 1861.

It did not seem to change much by 1910

Well he “won” more medals

Or you could wear a suit & tie. You know what those look like.

Magonistas - very smart for a bunch of radical lefties

The fabulous Pancho Villa sporting three different styles, first field uniform.

Note the rakish tilt to the hat. His expression says he did not usually dress like this, and certainly never wore a dress uniform.

Looking more comfortable in casual apparel

In this example he sports a fine bowtie. He is flanked by Alvaro Obregón, in a field uniform, & the American "Black Jack" Pershing in the US uniform with scout hat.

A general guide is that the lower your social class the bigger your hat is.

Zapata is very common.

More soldiers about their usual business wearing puttees and fabric hats.

The lady revolutionary might choose to adopt one of the male styles of dress or may be more comfortable in the traditional female attire.

The legendary Juana Gallo classically dressed.

Amelio Robles Avila, Mexico's first recognised transexual, a colonel in the revolutionary army.

